

I am against consolidating the media into a few corporations. This I fear will limit the amount and quality of news and other free speech avenues available for the expressions of free speech. In Oklahoma City now there the news and radio stations all sound alike and their news coverage is the craps. They are more concerned with how they look than the quality of news they give. Also what happened to the time when a tv station or radio station gave an editorial and they told the listeners that it was such, now it seems that the whole news presentation is an editorial based on their views only. It is no wonder that people do not tune into the local or national news as it is a piece of crap, given by a bunch of cute people who spend more time patting themselves on the back for being first with a breaking story, (it appears that all stories are now breaking stories, even the dog stopping to take a crap in the middle of the road). In closing if the FCC allows this to happen, I think there needs to be a congressional investigation of the FCC as I thought they were there to guard against such consolidation of powers.
